

CIFC LAUNCHES PHILANTHROPIC PROGRAM IN CONNECTION WITH CLO TRANSACTIONS

Commits to Annual Donation to Social, Economic or Environmental Organizations

CIFC Funding 2021-IV Deal Parties Contribute $145,000 to Black Girls CODE for Inaugural Donation

NEW YORK, May 19, 2021 – CIFC Asset Management LLC (“CIFC”), an alternative credit specialist serving institutional investors globally with more than $30 billion in assets under management, announced the launch of the CLO Initiative for Change, a philanthropic program in connection with collateralized loan obligations (“CLOs”) issued by the firm, dedicated to supporting organizations driving social, economic or environmental change. In support of racial equity and economic progress in the Black community, CIFC has partnered with the deal parties of its latest CLO, CIFC Funding 2021-IV, including RBC Capital Markets, Appleby (Cayman) Ltd, Allen & Overy LLP, Milbank LLP, BNY Mellon, and Locke Lord LLP, to make a collective contribution of $145,000 to Black Girls CODE (“BGC”). CIFC’s CLO Initiative for Change commits to making a coordinated donation of this kind on an annual basis to different organizations.

Founded by Kimberly Bryant in 2011, BGC is a non-profit organization focused on empowering girls of color ages 7 to 17 to become innovators in the science, technology, engineering, and math (STEM) fields, leaders in their communities, and builders of their own futures through exposure to computer science and technology. Recognized as a transformative global movement fueled by the impact of its chapters across the U.S. and abroad, BGC aspires to educate 1 million girls of color by 2040 through after-school programs, workshops, virtual events, mentorships, summer programs and access to a growing alumni network.

Mark Sanofsky, Managing Director at CIFC and a member of the firm’s Diversity & Inclusion Committee, said, “As we foster the next generation of learners and leaders, it is essential to promote and advocate for racial and economic equity, and BGC’s mission embodies these principles. We are incredibly proud to support BGC as the organization continues to level the playing field by offering opportunities to young women of color currently underrepresented in STEM industries. In launching this philanthropic program, we hope to help shed light on important social, economic and environmental issues and effect change through collaboration with various organizations for years to come.”

Chris Heron, Co-Head of CLO Origination, and Head of CLO Syndication and CLO Warehouse Financing at RBC Capital Markets, added, “We are accustomed to working closely with CIFC on CLO transactions and are delighted to extend our partnership through this contribution. We thank CIFC for initiating this first-of-its-kind effort in the CLO marketplace, and are proud to bring broader awareness to BGC and its critical work.”

Ms. Bryant concluded, “Addressing the stagnancy surrounding diversity in the realm of STEM starts with eliminating barriers that stand in the way of accessibility and exposure to these spaces. CIFC’s commitment to supporting Black Girls CODE will be instrumental in helping us continue to drive transformative change in the tech industry and get closer to our goal of teaching 1 million girls how to code by 2040.”

About CIFIC's Diversity & Inclusion Committee

CIFIC's Diversity & Inclusion Committee, which is led by senior leadership of the firm, is focused on advancing diversity and inclusion in the workplace. The Committee's mission is to increase awareness and establish strategies and operating plans that incorporate business alignment, leadership accountability and measured success in key areas. CIFIC recognizes that diversity of backgrounds -- be it gender, ethnicity, experience, or other -- contributes to diversity of thought and a deeper understanding of the world and of the countries and companies in which it invests. CIFIC believes this leads to better insight, increased creativity, more informed risk-taking and decision making, and stronger business and investment results for clients and stakeholders.
